

John Hermann

Australia should have a truly independent foreign policy, should be more closely aligned with the interests of its many Asian neighbours, and should cease to be an obedient vassal of a large foreign power which persists in maintaining wars in many parts of the world in order to satisfy the interests of its burgeoning military industries. I think former PM Malcolm Fraser's book "Dangerous Allies" spells it out clearly.